LOGLINE

Director Adam Finberg discovers the sobering cost of the addiction treatment industry in his newest film The Business of Recovery. The film explores how the industry is fleecing families in crisis out of untold billions.

SYNOPSIS

As drug and alcohol addictions skyrocket, The Business of Recovery examines the untold billions that are being made off of families in crisis. With little regulation or science, the treatment industry has become a cash cow business that continues to grow while deaths pile up. Through unique access to internationally recognized treatment facilities, as well as emotional stories of addicts and their families, the film reveals how the treatment industry in the United States preys on addicts with little more than promises of hope and the assurance of astronomically high treatment costs. The film challenges us to reconsider our assumptions about treating addiction and the human cost we will pay by allowing the industry to continue business as usual.

PRODUCER'S BIOGRAPHY

GREG HORVATH resides in Los Angeles, CA and is a nationally respected motivational speaker, author and producer. The Business of Recovery is the third feature film Greg has produced. Unfinished Business was considered for a Canadian Gemini Award, and Hope for the Broken Contender won the American Express People's Choice award at the Calgary International Film Festival. He views the world through the lens that everyone can overcome and build a life they are proud to lead. Greg is very passionate about The Business of Recovery, a story he felt compelled to tell.

PRODUCTION NOTES

Greg Horvath worked for over a decade in the addiction treatment industry. In that time he observed the same suspect treatment practices over and over again with everything from kickbacks and referral fees to antiquated treatment administered by untrained staff.

He watched as hundreds of people were caught in the myth of recovery. It became a self-serving cycle — spend big money on treatment, get out and relapse, spend big money on treatment, get out and relapse. With few exceptions, the recovery process never ended and individuals were caught in a cycle of continued treatment attempts. Greg began wondering if there was a better way. He would ask the treatment providers why they didn't change how to treat addiction given the high rate of failure, but his questions were always quickly dismissed.

After a number of years of witnessing this horrific cycle of failure, Greg had enough. He could no longer stand idly by and not take action. He decided the only way to make the behemoth addiction treatment industry change would be by exposing its shortcomings.

In 2010, Greg started researching all aspects of the addiction treatment industry in the United States. Even after many years of observing sub-par services, the results shocked him.

His next step was to find a director that would be able to tell this incredible story — Greg found Adam Finberg.

They traveled all over the United States to talk to people from all aspects of the addiction treatment industry; scientists, medical doctors, psychologists, and some of the most recognizable treatment providers in the country if not the world.

The film highlights many experts in the field of recovery, including:

- Ruben Baler a Health Scientist from NIDA (The National Institute Drug Abuse) in Bethesda, MD;
- Dr. William R. Miller from the University of New Mexico, who has participated in dozens of clinical trials, written 40 books and has over 400 professional publications to his name;
- Dr. Lance Dodes, an author, addiction expert and a graduate of Harvard medical school, and
- Stuart Finkelstein M.D., an addictionologist, who's treated thousands of addiction patients spanning his 30 year career.

Early on, Greg and Adam knew it was important for the treatment centers to be a part of the film. We were allowed access to a number of treatment centers including The Betty Ford Center in Rancho Mirage, CA, Hazelden in Center City, MN, High Watch Recovery (co-founded by Bill Wilson, the founder of Alcoholics Anonymous) in Somers, CT and Seasons Recovery in Malibu, CA. They also spoke with the president of the National Association of Addiction Treatment Providers.

While there was unfortunately no shortage of families with horror stories about treatment, getting them to speak about it publicly on camera was not an easy task. Eventually Greg and Adam found courageous families who were currently dealing with the devastating effects of an addicted loved one for whom the addiction treatment process had failed. They wanted to help prevent others from going through the same experience. Their heart wrenching and emotional stories unfold in real time throughout the film.

The goal of this film is to bring awareness to the gross deficiencies of how the industry approaches the treatment of addiction. The overwhelming number of people that die each year in the US from addiction is proof that the industry fails miserably at treating addiction, but it has not changed; it has only grown. Unfortunately for the families interviewed, and other families with similar stories across the U.S., the treatment industry is hugely profitable, bringing in billions for business - while deaths pile up.

Adam and Greg are calling for a change within the industry and believe that the public will demand action after watching the documentary. The industry must change. There must be oversight and regulations in place that protect the public and the families who are entrusting these centers with their loved ones. Treatment needs to be more scientific and empirically validated. The educational requirements for people treating addiction must be higher. Together, we can substantially improve the way we treat addiction.

DIRECTOR'S BIOGRAPHY

ADAM FINBERG is a Los Angeles based filmmaker. He is a graduate of Northwestern University and the American Film Institute's Directing program. His award-winning directing work spans a wide spectrum of media from national TV commercials to groundbreaking music videos, films and documentaries, including the revealing After Katrina: Rebuilding St. Bernard Parish that chronicled the post-hurricane life in a small community. He has also been a lead editor on unscripted hit television shows for a variety of networks including Discovery, WETV, Lifetime, MSNBC, History, TruTV, Oxygen, ABC, CMT, Showtime, VH1 and MTV.

DIRECTOR'S STATEMENT

Adam originally met Greg Horvath in 2005 and directed a documentary about his inspirational story of recovery and self-improvement. Greg had been sober since 1990, and had decided in 1999, at age 38, to pursue his lifelong dream of going to college and playing football. He has told his story many times at motivational talks and working with other addicts.

In 2011, after Greg had spent several years working in the treatment world, he approached Adam about directing The Business of Recovery. He had seen firsthand the enormous amounts of money exchanged for services that were not delivering as promised, and he felt very strongly that the system needed to change.

As a filmmaker, Adam was intrigued by the challenge of exploring a complex problem that, starting out, he knew little about. He approached the film's premise with open eyes, and what he discovered astounded him. Adam quickly learned that so many families had hidden stories to tell about a family member with an addiction problem, looking for a solution. When Greg and Adam started researching the numbers of deaths involving substance abuse and compared it to the size of the industry, they saw that more and more money was being spent on addiction every year, with no abatement in the human cost. Adam's hope is that the film will lead to better oversight of an industry that makes wild claims, and spark a deeper mental health discussion about the realities of how to help those who are struggling with addiction and their families.

INTERVIEWS

PLEASE NOTE: The following titles/positions were current at the time of filming.

LANCE DODES, M.D.

Addiction Expert & Author, Harvard Medical School

Lance Dodes, M.D. is a Training and Supervising Analyst Emeritus with the Boston Psychoanalytic Society and Institute and was assistant clinical professor of psychiatry at Harvard Medical School (retired). He has been the Director of the Substance Abuse Treatment Unit of Harvard's McLean Hospital, Director of the Alcoholism Treatment Unit at Spaulding Rehabilitation Hospital (now part of Massachusetts General Hospital) and Director of the Boston Center for Problem Gambling. He annually chairs the discussion group The Psychology of Addiction at the fall meeting of the American Psychoanalytic Association. He is the author or co-author of a number of journal articles and book chapters about addiction. His books, The Heart of Addiction (HarperCollins, 2002), Breaking Addiction: A 7-Step Handbook for Ending Any Addiction (HarperCollins, 2011) and The Sober Truth (Beacon Press, 2014) have been described as revolutionary advances in understanding how addictions work. Dr. Dodes has been honored by the Division on Addictions at Harvard Medical School for "Distinguished Contribution" to the study and treatment of addictive behavior, and has been elected a Distinguished Fellow of the American Academy of Addiction Psychiatry. He has been invited to speak about the treatment of addiction at symposia countrywide.

WILLIAM R. MILLER, PH.D

Emeritus Distinguished Professor, University of New Mexico

William joined the faculty at the University of New Mexico in 1976 after receiving his Ph.D. in clinical psychology from the University of Oregon. He served as Director of Clinical Training for UNM's APA-approved doctoral program in clinical psychology and as Co-Director of UNM's Center on Alcoholism, Substance Abuse and Addictions (CASAA). Dr. Miller's publications include 40 books and over 400 articles and chapters. Fundamentally interested in the psychology of change, he has focused in particular on the development, testing, and dissemination of behavioral treatments for addictions. He served as principal investigator for numerous research grants and contracts, founded a private practice group, and served as a consultant to many organizations including the United States Senate, the World Health Organization, the National Academy of Sciences, and the National Institutes of Health.

In recognition of his research contributions, Dr. Miller is a recipient of the international Jellinek Memorial Award, two career achievement awards from the American Psychological Association, and an Innovators in Combating Substance Abuse award from the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation. He maintains an active interest in pastoral counseling and the integration of spirituality and psychology. The Institute for Scientific Information lists him as one of the world's most cited scientists.

THE WAY WE TREAT ADDICTION HAS TO CHANGE.

TAKE ACTION

Our goal in making The Business of Recovery was to demand the addiction treatment industry change the way addiction is treated in three primary areas:

1

The use of scientifically proven treatments (empirical, not evidenced based).

2

Better educated and medically licensed professionals in charge of addiction treatment.

3

Regulations to protect the patient and align addiction treatment facilities with medical standards.

For many, many people this is a life and death issue.

WE NEED YOUR HELP.
